San Francisco, Nov. 25, 2013 - ZenDay, the "GPS for your time" featured on the Google Play Store as one of the most innovative productivity tools, unveiled the first time management system for Android that merges calendar information with tasks and to-dos in a 3D magical user interface, and lets you see immediately what's ahead.

But beyond a simple organizer, ZenDay is a time coach to help you stay zen, despite a busy and stressful life, by allowing to rate yourself on your achievements to improve and become more effective." ZenDay allows you to gauge your progress during previous weeks.

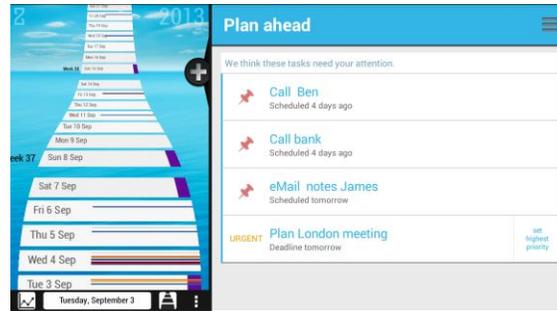

"ZenDay's mission is to make your life easier by displaying all the things you have to do in a unique 3D timeline, that gives the feeling of moving forward in time, helping users keep commitments and resist procrastination," said Richard Phan, the CEO of ZenDay. "But beyond a simpler organizer, ZenDay is a Time Coach to help you stay Zen, despite a busy and stressful life, by allowing to rate yourself on your achievements in order to improve and become more effective."

Floating Tasks

For the first time ever, users can create “floating tasks,” which are dynamically added to the calendar whenever there is time available.

And depending on priorities, tasks get rearranged in the calendar and once completed, automatically disappear to give more space to other commitments.

A Time Coach

ZenDay allows you to debrief your previous weeks, review how you did recently and rate yourself. By becoming more aware of your achievements, you will naturally become more effective. All coaches know this secret: you quickly improve just by taking the time to analyze what went well and decide for yourself what to change.

ZenDay is available today for free on the Google Play Store, with the iOS version coming soon. ZenDay synchronizes with all existing calendars (Google Calendar, Microsoft Outlook, Facebook...), on all devices (with Android 4 or later), as well as Google Tasks and Evernote, through a plug-in.
